

NORTHERN REGION NEWSPLAN

NEWSPLAN is a joint British Library and Library Regions project which over the past 10 years has recorded all collections of local and regional newspapers in libraries and other repositories in the UK and Ireland, noted their state of preservation and conservation and prioritised their transfer to microfilm. NEWSPLAN is highly regarded as the most successful and sustained national co-operative venture in the UK and Ireland.

In 1987 the Northern Region NEWSPLAN survey, carried out by INFORMATION NORTH, aimed to record surviving holdings and microfilm of all newspapers currently or previously published in the region, comprising Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham, Northumberland, Gateshead, Newcastle, North Tyneside, South Tyneside and Sunderland. Over 900 titles were identified as having been published since the first Newcastle Gazette in the year 1710, with collections held in over 80 locations in libraries, archives, museums and newspaper offices. The survey results were published by the British Library in the Northern Region NEWSPLAN Report in 1988.

The NEWSPLAN files now available on the Regional Information Service are based on the comprehensive 1988 survey, with a revision carried out in June 1998. There are two alphabetical listings of titles, one for the North East, one for Cumbria. Under each title are listed what collections and microfilm of the paper have been identified, and where they are held, starting with the holdings of the British Library Newspaper Library in Colindale, London, followed by the holdings within the region. Newspapers often change their titles; where this has happened, information is collected under a single title, with see references from other titles. For papers which are still published, information is usually collected under the current title. For papers which have ceased, the first or best-known title is usually used. The place of publication or principal distribution is given after the title, where necessary. Free newspapers are included, although it is often difficult to trace these.

At present the data is in text files. It is hoped in the near future to make a fully-searchable database version available.
